There was an undersea cable project in the general area where Conception burned down.

No one survived. This was DEW. They were diving what they thought was a coral reef and exploring caves. They actually are parked over a large network of tunnels which go to under sea structures. They are very active, and not built by humans.

"In a chilling recording of the mayday call, the captain of the Conception can be heard telling the Coast Guard that all of his passengers are trapped below deck 'with no escape hatch'.

'There's 33 people on board the vessel on fire. They can't get off,' the captain says.

The dispatcher responds: 'Roger. Are they locked inside the boat? Roger. Can you get back on board and unlock the doors so they can get off? Roger. You don't have any firefighter gear at all, no fire extinguishers or anything?'

Most of the captain's responses are unintelligible, except for the words: 'I can't breathe.' "

SCENARIO 1. The passengers are a bunch of people currently not known, but whose names will come up in future/ongoing investigations, that will go nowhere because they will all be declared dead when their bodies are never recovered.

SCENARIO 2. The passengers are overwhelmingly people with no surviving close relatives, and will supposedly show up over the next few weeks, but they'll be the people from the first paragraph stepping into their new identities.

Possibly a mix of both, and we'll see about 17 of the 34 currently missing people survive.

>On April 27, 1990, the Deputy Agricultural Commissioner found a metal box in an old shed on the ranch. Inside the box were human remains, practically turned to ashes. The Santa Barbara County Coroner found a few clues within the remains, including: a snap-like clothing fastener manufactured during the 1940s, several false teeth from the 1950s, and a diamond-studded platinum ring from before WWII. Tests on the bone fragments determined that it belonged to an elderly female.

>Hillary Clinton arranged a private meeting with an executive at the heart of her Dow Chemical donation scandal.

Clinton's relationship with Dow Chemical chairman and CEO Andrew Liveris is coming under scrutiny. Breitbart reported that Dow began partnering with the Clinton Global Initiative immediately after Hillary Clinton drafted a bill to regulate a chemical produced by Dow that Clinton said harms women and children. That bill died quietly, Clinton never brought it up again, and her financial relationship with Liveris continued.

Pure speculation but just shooting the shit here:

Logical answer is an accident. Evil answer is insurance fraud gone wrong. Schizo answer is, they did work with movie studios, & we just had a C-130 crash landing for a company that works with movie studios.

Weird thing is them supposedly saying the charter customers were locked below deck. That can't be right. I've never been on a boat with a locked door that a man can't break through.

I've never been on a 60' dive boat but I've been on a yacht bigger than that. Would be possible to barricade people down in the hull but, the doors aren't usually built for security. So unless some boat fag says different, I think the logical assumption is this was a gasoline fire, and the boat went up quick.

Maybe also weird they haven't released any names though, AFAIK.

The only access was a stairway that was probably one person wide. They would have no chance in a fast moving fire even if there were no door. The first two people racing to get out would block the stairs with 25 people right behind them.

They all died in a giant pile. They'll probably find claw marks on the bodies.

There was an unsourced comment in the LA Times that the boat was Coast Guard compliant for fire safety, whatever that means.

Regardless, it is an inherently dangerous if not deadly place to be. Other than the fact that it is technically intended for occupancy, it meets all other requirements of a permit-required confined space.

U.S. Department of Labor Occupational Safety and Health Administration
OSHA 3138-01R
2004

By definition, a confined space:

Is large enough for an employee to enter fully and perform assigned work;
Is not designed for continuous occupancy by the employee; and
Has a limited or restricted means of entry or exit.

These spaces may include underground vaults, tanks, storage bins, pits and diked areas, vessels, silos and other similar areas.

By definition, a permit-required confined space has one or more of these characteristics:

Contains or has the potential to contain a hazardous atmosphere;
Contains a material with the potential to engulf someone who enters the space;
Has an internal configuration that might cause an entrant to be trapped or asphyxiated by inwardly converging walls or by a floor that slopes downward and tapers to a smaller cross section; and/or Contains any other recognized serious safety or health hazards.

Lesbians already have an admitted mental illness, child murder is something they generally joke about casually. If the children are adopted, it's even worse. That's something I'd easily chalk up to lesbian insanity, unless there are other redpills to that case that I haven't swallowed yet.

Lesbians often see their adopted children as fashion accessories, not humans and certainly not family.

Likely some retard left the propane on, didn't have alarms for it.. spark triggered an explosion.. hit the diver tanks which are pure oxygen and it created another explosion/inferno. And in case of fire at night, it would be extremely dark and disorienting if you even wake up from the oxygen deprivation. Many of the modern safety features of cruise ships are based on the fact that it's hard to see in a fire on a ship and have stories where people literally died 2 feet from the door to safety.

Not saying 30 people mysteriously dying a boat isn't suspicious, just saying it plausible to die in a fire on a boat with the doors unlocked.

Everything fits this being how it went down especially since it is clear this shit burned from the top down ... More than likely an explosion/fire happened suddenly and the explosion/rapid damaged blocked the only exit. Great having a fucking propane setup above and near the only exit. Pro >if the explosion/fire happened there due to the propane setup

I'm thinking that's exactly what happened, which suggests somebody fucked up pretty good. It wouldn't be the first time.
A typical propane setup is >tank stored in separate, vented compartment accessible from outside the boat >solenoid immediately after tank/regulator

Solenoid is to be off whenever the stove is not in use, just in case the lines or stove have a leak.
I'm thinking it was left on and there was a leak, the hoses were weathered/cracked and leaking, or inadequate chafe protection.
They might have also used solid lines for the gas, which would explain this pretty well. It's not uncommon for older boats to explode due to the solid lines fatiguing over the decades and leaking.
Here's a video of an intentional propane explosion on a sailboat for fun:

Nope, the bust in San Pedro had them high and dry

They set the thing on fire, and made off for their deliveries as the Coast Guard were called in.

Someone sabotaged the boat, and it was used as a "sacrifice" for a distraction while they moved their goods in to replace the last shipment, the loss of their shipment the week before.

They did this as a way of warning the US about their cabal's power working with the military.

Trump just showed that they were targeting a Missile Launch Site from Space, as they were also able to use the same satellite to fry the ship with a DEW causing the ignition of the fuel.

The same Satellite......caused the rocket to ignite, and then the tanks as well.....they then repositioned it and fried the ship.

They found sunken treasure, a couple of the crew decided it might be better if everyone who knew about it died. That's it, that's the full story here, wait for one or more of the remaining crew to die suspiciously while one or more disappears only to tuen up in 40 years or so rich beyond anyones wildest dreams.

It's not political, it's not about epstein, it's not even military or alien related, it's about good old fashioned human greed.

No it was vengeance for the Cocaine shipment that got busted last week. 385 million worth

The bust was something that cut off ALL OF HOLLYWOOD from their supply

They rushed in another shipment but because the heat was on, they torched the ship to create a distraction for the Coast Guard to be tied up with in the early morning, as the shipment was slipped into the harbor.

Of course they were locked in the bottom of the ship.....and that the captain gets off the ship first, leaves the passengers behind and survives to tell the tale is suspect

Also there is a good chance that there was a plan hatched to set this up recently with a satellite that was used to fry the Iranian Missile Launch Site.

As soon as it was melted down, they moved the Sat to the Pacific to make the ship catch fire.

It's obvious that there is a state of confusion about these tragedies......as the radio transmissions showed that there was interference that is continually found in these cases when there is a frequency used to jam them.

The interference from the radio call showed that they were frying their signals and possibly lit the thing on fire.

Jamming usually overrides the transmission entirely. Poor transmission can be from antenna problems (not extended), too far away for the specific radio/antenna, something in the way, and so on. Since the voice came through, I'd say no to jamming.

The original voice came through, then the questions by the Coast Guard were repeated over a dead silence, whereas the reply that came through later to the questions was jammed, or sent from another location that seemed to be a radio transmission from another Naval Search and Rescue ship but was filled with static whereas the others from the Conception were clear as day....

"I cant breathe" was the last thing that the Captain said.

Listen to it....the reply was some jammed signal from the ship, or it was a transmission coming through from a remote location.

You would literally need a nuclear weapon to even hope to do it. I don't think you actually understand - not just the physical requirements of focusing electromagnetic radiation over a couple hundred kilometers distance, but the amount of energy actually needed to do it.

Divers don't use pure oxygen.

Boats like Conception have fire extinguishers all over the place. Marine transport rules are pretty strict about that kind of thing, just like with life jackets. Conception was a commercial vessel and the captain had a special charter license.

There is no fucking way the Grape Escape did not have at least one extinguisher on board. Probably 2-3. There's almost always one zip tied near the helm on boats like that when they are sold. If you find more pictures of the Conception and Grape Escape you will probably see a fire extinguisher or two in a bracket on the walls.

I've been diving and boating my whole life. PADI certified, Yacht club Gold VII etc. The captain of the Conception lied to the dispatcher. He had access to many fire extinguishers, and there were (supposed to be) many fire extinguishers in the lower deck and in the galley. Guaranteed there were a couple on the main deck and one by the helm on a boat that big, and at least one on the Grape Escape.

You need a special charter license to operate a boat with paying customers on board like the Conception. That captain was certified and took safety courses and all that garbage. The boat was as inspected as well, it was checked for fire extinguishers and the piece of shit captain knew exactly where they all were.

Here's the real kicker. Not only did the Conception have many fire extinguishers, the galley also probably had a sprinkler system. If it had a propane stove, it probably had a sprinkler for the whole fucking room in case the gas went up or something. The galley was directly above the entrance to the hold. Even shitty old fishing boats have sprinklers if they have gas, installing one in a fucking boat is very far from rocket science.

The most plausible explanation is that the people on that boat were murdered and the captain was involved.

Thank you.
There was an escape hatch as well.
2x3, and a double staircase.
Everyone is confused why the passengers decided to burn to death rather than use them.
Something stinks to high heaven and it isn't only the stench of the burning bodies.

There wasn't only 1 exit anon, that's the problem.
Double stairs and an escape hatch. That's more than 1.

Heres a shitty schooner galley, the extinguisher is out of frame, if those aren't sprinklers on the ceiling. Notice the giant fucking firemans axe though. Typical equipment on a large vessel like a schooner or a yacht that sleeps 50.

if the fire got out of hand quickly, some dinky little extinguisher wouldn't do much of anything. doesn't mean anyone was murdered intentionally. it's possible, but not likely.

>In 1988, Lowe was involved in a sex scandal over a videotape of him having sex with a 16-year-old girl he met in a nightclub.
>Another part of the same tape was leaked at the time, showing Lowe and friend Justin Moritt both having vaginal and oral sex with a young American model named Jennifer, who was never identified, in a hotel room in Paris.

That boat had multiple extinguishers, and they are typically the foam type for chemical fires, since there's usually enough water around for regular ones. Meaning the extinguisher used would have been specifically designed to put out a fire started by accelerants.

So no, there would have been an huge and immediate dump of fire retardant detergent all over the place and a clear path to the door or at least the next fire extinguisher.

The only way the captain and 5 guys could have failed is if:

A) Someone went gluestick eating retarded and dumped fuel all across the deck before locking themselves in the hold and lighting that bitch the fuck up.

B) An explosion, which the captain somehow forgot to mention...

C) Captain or a crew member is a murderer.

Keep in mind the captain has already been caught lying. Regardless of whether or not it was possible for him to stop the fire, he lied to the dispatcher about having access to a fire extinguisher while watching everyone locked in the hold burn to death.

The may day said they couldnt breath, wouldnt YOU scream fire at least once on the radio? If my boat was on fire and i made a mayday I wouldn't say i could breath, perhaps they were getting gassed? Someone freaks out and calls a mayday? Then they light the boat on fire, move the girls and get out of dodge like they planned anyways. Just seems like if you know your way around a boat and call a mayday first thing you would say would be problem and location. Not just saying you cant breath, thats pretty novice
